A Little Bird Told Me: How (and why) to talk about heritage conservation on the Internet

Andrew Jeanes
Heritage Canada Foundation
National Summit 2012

Disclaimer #1

- Opinions are mine alone
- Not speaking for my employer
- Really

Disclaimer #2

- Twitter, Facebook, Google, etc. are private companies aiming to make a profit—they are not public services or even utilities like the telephone
- So these ways of communicating may not be around forever, or they might not work the same way next year
- That said...

Why I went to Buffalo

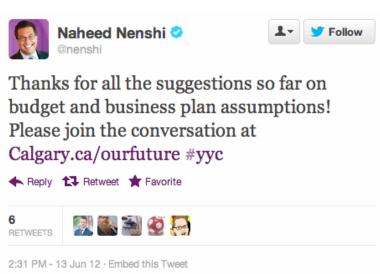

Tools for learning and talking about cultural heritage

- PowerPoint
- Email
- The World Wide Web in general
- Google (search, maps, Street View)
- Facebook (issue-specific pages)
- Twitter
- Smartphones

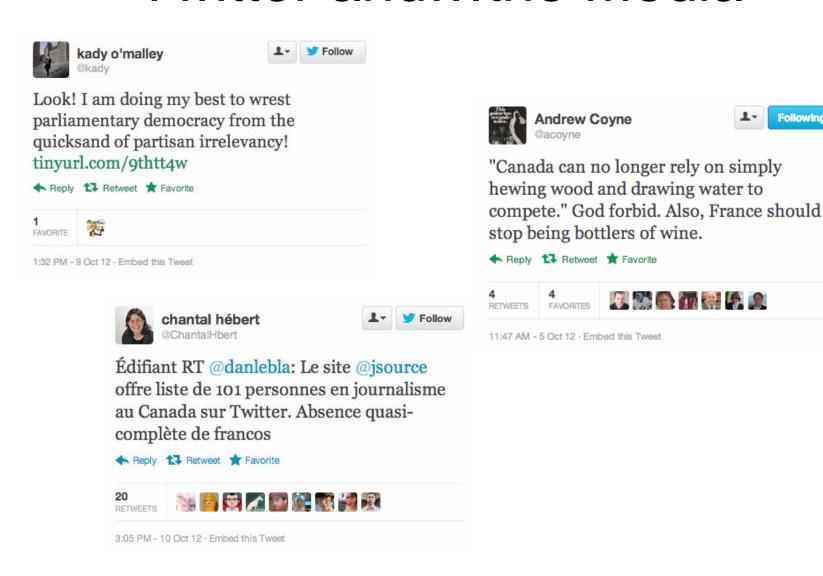

Twitter and...elected officials

Twitter and...the Media

Following

Twitter and...resistance

#manifencours

#ArabSpring

Tweets to tell stories

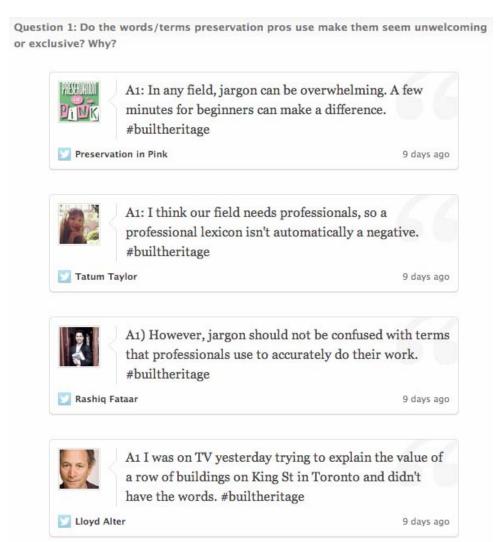

Tweeting as advocacy

Monthly #builtheritage chat

So where do 140 characters get you?

@wanderu